

RICHARD CARDAMONE is the director for the Bureau of Commonwealth Accounting with the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The bureau consists of three divisions which provide accounting services to agencies under the governor's jurisdiction. The bureau provides services such as accounting and budgetary control, revenue services, grant management, federal accounting reporting, financial statement preparations and other specialized accounting services as needed. Prior to that, he served as assistant director for the Bureau of Financial Management. In that role his responsibilities included reviewing and improving existing financial processes and policy review and development. Rich has worked in the accounting field for eight years, five of which have been with the commonwealth.

Rich received a bachelor of business administration degree from Bloomsburg University. In addition he is a certified public accountant and certified government financial manager. Rich resides in Cumberland County with his wife and two boys.