

NANCY DiPAOLO is the assistant director of congressional and intergovernmental affairs for the Recovery Accountability and Transparency Board, where she has served since its inception.

In the three plus years the Board has existed she has been responsible for media, congressional and intergovernmental relations, now concentrating solely on the latter two. She is responsible for working with members of Congress and their staffs on all matters related to the Board's mandates and serves as liaison to the 55 states and territories, coordinating and fostering key federal-state activities.

Before this position, Ms. DiPaolo served as former Chairman Earl Devaney's deputy associate inspector general for external affairs at the Department of Interior; she is pleased to continue serving the Board under new Chair Kathleen Tighe.

Prior to joining government service, Nancy was a director at Capitol Advantage, where she conceived and developed public affairs programs for leading corporations and associations. These programs utilized the power of constituent relations and new technologies to help entities grow their federal and state legislative influence - constructing strategies to work with congressional committees, statehouses and governors to achieve each organization's goals through legislation and appropriations.

Nancy brings with her a wealth of corporate and public sector experience in constituent relations, consumer marketing, politics and negotiating combined with a drive towards efficiency and collaboration between government entities. A native Washingtonian and graduate of Rhodes College, Nancy resides in Old Town Alexandria with her beloved black Labrador.
