

Paul Hinkle, Chief Technology Officer, Safelight Security Advisors

As chief technology officer at Safelight Security Advisors, Paul is responsible for security research, course design, course development, and information technology. Paul is an information security professional with 14 years of experience in application development and information security. Paul brings a passion and talent for communicating his security expertise to employees across all levels of an organization.

Prior to working for Safelight, Paul joined Symantec as part of the @stake acquisition. In the role of principal security instructor, he helped build education offerings in secure application development, the management of the secure development lifecycle and infrastructure security. Paul has partnered with leading clients in the financial industry and in government and has delivered training in information security concepts to approximately 5,000 IT professionals.

Prior to @stake, Paul developed his training skills at WebMethods, a leading Web services infrastructure company. He also worked as a consultant for Inventa and as a software systems designer for NetResponse, where he gained significant expertise in all phases of the software development lifecycle.
